

Reflection on Group Work Model

Joe Student

Over the spring semester, I volunteered to be the co-chairperson of the Annual FBLA Golf Tournament. Although I had never done anything like this before, I volunteered because I love being in FBLA, I felt it would be an interesting challenge, and I'm sure organizing such an event would look good on my resume.

In terms of working with others, I really learned a lot about how organized on needs to be. Many other people depended on me to help raise a great deal of money. As expected, I had to work with fellow students and FBLA coordinators to plan. However, I also had to make a presentation to the school committee to have the event approved, and I had to work closely with the Richmond Country Club staff to coordinate many details of the event. It was more work than I had originally thought, but the event turned out to be a great success. I am very proud of what I and the FBLA group have achieved.

I feel that I have grown a lot in co-chairing this event. As with most FBLA events, I learned a great deal about the kind of commitment and communication skills one needs to be successful in business.
